Blondes don't get to have all the fun. For rich, beautiful color with less maintenance, many women are switching back to their brunette roots. "A lot of people are just tired of getting highlights and are looking for something easy that will grow out really well," explains stylist Mindy Orsak. But a return to a darker hue doesn't have to be dull. "I don't see 'brown hair,'" she says. "I see golds, coppers and reds. There's a lot of depth that can go into making a beautiful brunette."

Natalie Vinas has officially worked in the beauty industry for 15 years, but she got her unofficial start at 8 years old when she cut her older sister's hair. "My mom walked in on us and was so mad, of course, until she saw that it actually looked good," she laughs. Since then, Vinas has gained a reputation as the go-to guru for color correction. Some of the biggest mistakes she sees come from at-home color jobs, which often result in a very different hue than shown on the box. Fortunately, she says, "The beautiful thing about color is that it can always be corrected."
